Center offers crafts and aid

by Margie Cooper
Staff Writer

Where do you go on campus when the brake cable on your bike snaps or your front tire goes flat?

Students can find these items and more at "the Cage," a student run store located inside the Craft Center in the University Union.

Besides finding tire-patching kits and brake cables there, students can buy craft supplies and tools for working with stained glass, silkscreening, wood-working and ceramics.

For the ceramist, the Cage offers 12 different types of clay. The cheapest kind is a conglomeration of clay types called "pug" which sells for $1 a bag. For more delicate pottery, students can buy a 25 pound bag of porcelain for $5.18.

Timbo Beauchamp, a student supervisor at the Craft Center, said the prices on some items tend to be slightly lower than at El Corral but said the Cage is not trying to compete with other campus services.

The Cage sells butcher paper for 5 cents a foot while the bookstore sells it for 50 cents a yard. A 16 ounce bottle of hydrogen peroxide costs 85 cents at the Cage while the bookstore charges 97 cents.

The Cage has been in operation as an adjunct to the Craft Center for about seven years and is run totally with the support of students. Any profits made from selling merchandise flows back into the operation of the Center.

The Cage is open daily from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. and on Sundays from noon to 9 p.m.

Advertising ridicules women with damaging role models

by Kristen Simon
Staff Writer

Everyone is affected by advertising. Joan Cirone, nurse practitioner at the Cal Poly Health Center, told a mostly female audience Wednesday during Women's History Week.

"Media Madness — Whose Body is this Anyway?" was the topic of a presentation given by Cirone on the effects of advertising on women.

Advertising, a $40 billion a year business, portrays women as either sex objects or moronic housewives, Cirone said.

Cirone showed a film titled "Killing us Softly—Advertising's Image of Women," which said advertising is considered the most powerful socializing aspect of American society. It is inescapable.

The film also noted that by age 60, viewers will have seen 50 million advertisements.

According to Cirone, ads are meant to sell more than products, they sell images. Sex, goals, beauty and gender roles are all used in a subtle, and sometimes not so subtle way by advertisers.

The public is constantly surrounded by the image of ideal female beauty, according to the film. But this is an ideal which does not exist — it is inhuman flawlessness.

Ads tell the public that being beautiful is a result of their product and not a result of the person inside.

It was also implied in the film that whatever a person has got isn't good enough. He or she has got to change. The body was shown as an object and the face as a mask.

Women are always stereotyped and unrealistically shown through the advertising medium, according to the film. There is a message to men to be in control and a message to the women to cling.

Moses calls for an end to Senate controversy

by Caroline Paras
Staff Writer

ASI Vice President Kevin Moses called Wednesday night for the Student Senate to end all in-house conflicts and encouraged the senate to formulate a set of goals and priorities to work on.

Moses, who serves as the senate chairman, told senators in a "State of the ASI" address he felt it "necessary to call for an end of such hyperbolic statements and deprecating remarks" as the ASI has been subjected to in recent weeks. He said he felt it was time for the ASI to "take on more productive endeavors."

Moses told the senators, "While a unified image may be held as desirable by many of you, of equal importance is that such an image be genuine, and not (be an) artificial creation of a public relations effort to cloud the true activities of a governing agency — nor should attention to the agency's image take precedence over resolution of legitimate points of concern and enforcement of existing policies."

Moses recommended that the senators re-evaluate the senate.

"A review of past problems readily reveals a consistent pattern that by (our) addressing (it) now would indicate a degree of foresight previously lacking," he said.

Moses said the ASI was created to help students. It was not created as a forum for "long winded tirades and personal attacks."

"For the most part our actions have a rather minimal impact on (student) services," Moses said. "Yet these services must be our first priority."

He recommended that the Senate investigate new programs or services that ASI could provide to students.

"Clearly such efforts would result in an improved environment for the students of this university, which after all should be our goal," Moses said.

He added that a debate has been going on about the role of student leaders and whether "personal growth" takes precedence over developing new services or projects. He told members of the senate that "true personal growth is attained through working on such projects and that interpersonal relationships are strengthened more by such work than mere talk and idle chatter."

Moses emphasized that meaningless activities of the Senate must be abandoned. He said senators should work toward a goal of expanding programs and services to students.

Publishing of Clary's GPA criticized by dean of students

by Caroline Paras
Staff Writer

The publishing of a student's grade point average was criticized Wednesday night by the dean of students, who called for the Student Senate to "review the matter carefully and to take appropriate action."

Russell Brown, who serves as the president's representative to the Student Senate, told members of the senate, he felt "deeply concerned" that an article in the Mustang Daily reporting the academic standards of ASI President Sandra Clary "contained what was reported to be the actual GPA."

It was reported in the Mustang Daily that during a closed session Feb. 16, Clary's academic eligibility was under question. During the closed session, members of the Student Senate were informed of the possibility of Clary's ineligibility.

According to the bylaws of the Associated Students Inc., executive officers such as the president and vice president are required to maintain a 2.0 GPA. Sources who attended the closed session told the Mustang Daily that Clary's GPA had fallen below 2.0. The Mustang Daily reported that GPA to be 0.86.

Brown told the senate he was sending a letter to the Mustang Daily editor and adviser criticizing the use of Clary's GPA. He said state and federal employees are forbidden to disclose a student's GPA without prior consent of the individual involved. Brown said the Mustang Daily's action in printing Clary's GPA can be "construed as an invasion of privacy."

"Legally, student's academic records are considered a protected category," Brown said.

Brown said he was advised by legal council that the Mustang Daily was protected by privacy laws, but he added, "Publishing such data has the potential to cause harm to the individual involved and should only be done with the consent of the individual regardless of the source of information."

Brown called the publishing of Clary's GPA "at best poor taste."

"I believe the story could have been covered effectively without mentioning exact grades," he said.

Education a must

Third World women neglected

by Steve Goodwin
Staff Writer

Women in Third World countries must be made to realize they are equal in intelligence and ability to the men they serve.

This was the theme of Thursday's discussion on Third World women, part of the National Women's History Week celebration at Cal Poly. Patricia Engle, a child development/economics instructor, addressed a group of men and women in a University Union lecture room in a presentation entitled "Third World Women Speak Out."

The presentation featured a short talk and the showing of "The Double Day," a film on the harsh treatment of Third World women.

"The concerns of Third World women are the same as (those of) most women," Engle said. "They want food and health care for their families, an education, and they want to do something different than their parents did."

Engle spoke of the large amounts of work these women do, with little assistance.

"Sixty to 80 percent of the food in Africa is grown by women, yet the majority of the food is sold to men."

Cal Poly students to 'Meet the Industry' in LA

by Gail Pellerin
Staff Writer

Standing in a Los Angeles hotel, with a cocktail in hand, Cal Poly students will have the opportunity to meet and converse with representatives from a variety of industries.

The 4th annual "Meet the Industry Dinner," sponsored by the Los Angeles chapter of Cal Poly's Alumni Association, will be held Thursday, March 31, at the Bonaventure Hotel.

The evening provides an opportunity for informative interaction between Cal Poly students and representatives from 20 to 30 companies.

According to student coordinator Jerry Goldsmith, "It's an excellent opportunity to be in a professional atmosphere with casual interactions."

Each company pays for a table, where a representative, a faculty member and six students sit while having dinner, Goldsmith explained. The situation provides an opportunity for representatives to get to know potential employees, and students to make contacts and gain some knowledge about several industries.

"And the company pays for the dinner," Goldsmith stressed.

About 150 to 200 juniors and seniors from all majors attend the activity along with 100 professionals. The cost is $10, which pays for transportation by bus. Buses leave Cal Poly at 1 p.m. and return to the university at 2 a.m., April 1. Students can also find their own transportation to Los Angeles.

The evening begins with a cocktail hour followed by dinner. Students are matched up according to their interests with the companies featured at the various tables.

The keynote speaker will be Ted Tollner, head football coach of University of Southern California and a Cal Poly alumnus.

Some of the companies participating in recent years include IBM, Arco, Pacific Telephone, Van Waters and Rogers and American Edwards Labs.

Students must sign up and fill out a student information sheet before Friday, March 4 at the faculty coordinator offices.

Goldsmith stressed that signing up does not guarantee a seat; students will be informed later whether they may attend.

For more information, contact student coordinator Bryant Moynihan at 544-1009.

Poly students provide social network for 'clients'

by Mary Hennessy
Staff Writer

Five Cal Poly students whose part time jobs require them to stimulate and motivate 17 ailing people must accept the fact that the people they deal with may never get better.

The students, four of whom are employed as work study employees and one who is doing her internship, work for the San Luis Obispo Mental Health Association in a program called "Socialization." Their "clients" all suffer from some type of mental illness.

Most are schizophrenics, some are manic depressives and others suffer from severe behavior disorders that cannot be medically labeled. Most have been hospitalized in either a state or private institution, and most are on some type of medication.

"What these people basically need is a structured environment, a kind of built-in social network," said Jane Jorgensen, rehabilitation therapist and supervisor of the San Luis Obispo Center. "We help them to socialize and learn skills. This is an additional step that is not 'sit down inside' therapy."

Jorgensen said schizophrenia can be divided into 10 different sub-classifications with varying symptoms, including hallucinations, thought disorders and autism. Manic depressives have an alternating balance of severe depression and elated behavior.

The student's job is to act as a role model for the clients and encourage them to increase their self confidence so they won't be re-hospitalized. The clients vary in the severity of their problems. However, all have graduated to the program of socialization from other therapy programs.

"I was leery of taking the job because of the whole stigma concerned with these people," said Kevin Wilhelm, a senior fruit science major. "For the most part they are just like everybody else. It has really helped me understand myself in terms of my relations to people. There are a lot of people out there who are almost over the edge."

Survey covers parking problems

Survey:

The survey is part of a student project for English 218. Step 1: Please complete the following survey and return it to one of the following stations: 1) the library lobby, 2) the U.U. information desk. Return it no later than Tuesday, March 8, 10 p.m.

Step 2:

Questions:

- 1) Are you a student or faculty member at Cal Poly?
- 2) How many on-campus parking tickets have you had this school year?
- 3) What do you feel is the primary purpose of on-campus parking tickets?
- 4a) Do you feel there should be on-campus parking tickets? yes/no
- 4b) If no, what alternatives do you propose?

5) Where do you think the money from tickets is distributed to?

6) Of the $15 spent per student on a parking permit, how much of that do you think the university receives?

7) Do you feel there is sufficient parking for you (see No. 1)? yes/no

8) Would you favor/oppose increased metered parking areas with 1 hour and 2 hour time limits?

8) Would you favor/oppose a parking structure on or near campus?

10) If you favor No. 9, would you favor/oppose a tuition increase to supplement the cost of the parking structure?

All results will appear in the Mustang Daily.

ty of education and technical aid from the U.S. is directed toward the men," Engle said.

With the large amount of aid this country gives to Third World countries, according to Engle, it is our responsibility to educate these women. This would bring about more efficient food production.

In Latin America, where citizens are beginning to work in factories, women are given the most tedious jobs. The work is done, however, because it is better than the low pay and poor working conditions of domestic labor.

"These women are socialized into these passive roles early on in their schools," Engle said.

"By the time they enter the work force, they do their jobs without question. It takes a rare woman to go against this trend."

Engle blames much of the problem on the men who are used to their roles as leaders and do their best to keep the women down.

She stated that although there are some movements for the rights of women in Third World countries, the process is very slow.

"The men must be educated as well as the women," Engle said. "They have to be convinced that women can do more and take more responsibility than they have traditionally."

The result, she said, would be better for both parties.

Poly promises musical weekend

Entertainment provided by band, choir

Cal Poly will present two musical events this weekend, one by the Cal Poly Symphonic Band and the other by the Men's and Women's Choir.

The symphony concert will be held in Chumash Auditorium at 8 p.m. Saturday March 5. Tickets cost $4 for the general public and $1.75 for students and are available at the UU Ticket Office and Premier Music Company of San Luis Obispo, and from members of the band.

Miles Anderson will perform as special guest artist with the Cal Poly Symphonic Band for its 17th annual Winter Band concert. Anderson plays the trombone and is noted for his membership in the Cincinnati Symphony, and involvement as principal trombonist with the San Francisco Symphony. He has also performed a solo at Carnegie Hall and recorded two albums.

The Cal Poly Brass Band will accompany Anderson during performance of Arthur Pryor's "Thoughts of Love." Other selections for the evening include Claudio Grafulla's "Washington Grays March," Richard Wagner's "Trauersinfonie," Arnold Freed's "Win, Place or Show," Elliot Del Borgo's "Prologue and Dance," and Anthony Innaccone's "After a Gentle Rain."

The Cal Poly Percussion Ensemble will also be part of the musical evening, and the conductor will be William Johnson, director of university bands and a member of the Cal Poly Music Department faculty.

The other concerts by the Men's and Women's Choir, which will be on the road tonight and this weekend as 50 Cal Poly students from various majors travel to missions singing and performing.

The choir will be accompanied by pianist Donald Goodman, and their program will encompass a 17th century German composition by Schutz sung by the men's choir. An organ and violins will also be in the piece. The 30 women in the choir will do a French Mass by Faure, and the entire group will perform a comical cantata by Vaughan Williams from Shakespeare's "Sir John in Love."

The group will travel to the San Luis Rey mission in Oceanside tonight and Loyola Marymount University on Saturday night. They will return to perform at the San Luis Obispo mission Sunday evening at 8 p.m. The price for this musical event is $4 for the general public, and $2 for students.

Negative female images used in selling products

The film also noted that human qualities are divided and labeled masculine and feminine in order to motivate people to buy certain products.

In a discussion following the film, Cirone told the audience that "we must raise awareness and realize how we are affected by advertising."

She divided the audience into groups and asked each group to list positive and negative aspects of the media. Each group decided the negative aspects outweighed the positive.

"One must work on elevating self-esteem. Everyone is unique," Cirone stated. "Don't blindly pursue a role model, rather focus on and nurture a positive aspect of your own personality."

Storm is one of century's worst

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The savage storm series that has walloped usually sunny Southern California within the past week with monsoon like rains, pounding waves and high winds ranks as one of the region's nastiest of the century.

The latest in a trilogy of powerful Pacific storms rolled into the area Monday afternoon, damaging at least 1,000 residences, killing more than eight people and severing 10 piers that had withstood harsh weather for nearly a century.

While the rainfall to date hasn't broken any records, a combination of nature's weapons has been disastrous for many storm victims since last weekend, and the state Office of Emergency Services put the statewide death toll at 17 and damage at $130 million.

Backroads closed due to rain

SANTA MARIA, CALIFORNIA—Due to wet conditions and anticipated storms most unsurfaced roads and the entire offroad vehicle route system on the Santa Lucia Ranger District have been closed, at least through the upcoming weekend.

The Santa Lucia Ranger District includes all National Forest lands in San Luis Obispo and northern Santa Barbara counties.

According to District Ranger Keith Guenther, the roads and ORV trails will be reopened after they have dried sufficiently to withstand normal traffic, usually two to seven days following a storm.

Newsline

Puerto Ricans lauded by Pope

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — Pope John Paul II celebrated an outdoor Mass for an estimated 1 million Costa Ricans Thursday, urging them "to work for peace and overcome hate and violence."

He praised the people of this democratic nation that has no army—a rare exception in this part of the world—for "the climate of work and peace which distinguishes you."

Aided by six local bishops, the pope celebrated the Mass from an altar on a hill in La Sabana Park overlooking running tracks and soccer fields. As the faithful, who had walked miles carrying canteens and lunches, waved papal flags, airplanes flew over and dropped confetti and flowers on them.

Vendors with large piles of watermelons and soft drinks were on hand, and all businesses and government offices were closed. Some people slept in the park overnight, to get good views of the pontiff.

When the pope awoke at the Papal Nunciature, or Vatican Embassy, thousands of people were waiting in its gardens for a blessing. The pope, smiling, obliged them.

Queen tours San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II, who has suffered through violent storms and rowdy protestors on her visit to California, got a glimpse of sunshine and smiles Thursday as she began a hectic day of sightseeing with a serenade from Tony Bennett.

The brief entertainment at Louise M. Davies Symphony Hall was marred by a man who stood and shouted "Stop The Torture" three times before he was hustled from the auditorium by plainclothes officers.

As the storm clouds cleared Thursday, riot-clad police lined the streets outside the queen's hotel and along the routes she and Prince Philip would take on the day's tour.

First lady Nancy Reagan, who flew to San Francisco with the royal party Wednesday, stayed behind while the queen motored to the city's $38.5 million Louise M. Davies Symphony Hall to be entertained by singer Mary Martin and Tony Bennett.

Outside the glistening white-and-glass structure, a crowd estimated at up to 1,000, some eager for a glimpse of the visiting monarch and others there to jeer, greeted the queen's motorcade under the watchful eye of dozens of police, some viewing the crowd from horseback.

A large banner emblazoned with the legend, "We love Queen Elizabeth," competed with another that read "Free Ireland." Flags of both nations waved in the brisk breeze.

Guests at the reception were treated to pastries from Poland, Japan and England, served by young women clad in native costumes from those lands.

Triathlon

Last week's triathlon sponsored by the Cal Poly chapter of the California Association of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance (CAHPERD) had its share of drama. The event involved 18 laps in the Cal Poly pool (a quarter mile), a ten-mile bike route around campus and a five kilometer run out toward the air strip. Winners from first to third for men were John Scott, John Clark and Richard Aleshire. First and second for women were Dawn Carlson and Cathy Henelley.

education major also with the program, emphasized the fact that the clients are simply human beings who have suffered more severe setbacks in life than the average person.

"Each of them has a special quality of their own," she said. "They've really had some bad luck in their lives."

Wilhelm agreed.

"They are loving, wonderful people," he said. "There is such an invalid stigma attached to these people. Most of them are very bright. They keep you on top of things. They are sharper than the average person when it comes to picking up cues as to how you feel about them."

Students who enter the program do so by simply applying and interviewing with Jorgensen. The students are screened for their readiness to work and their ability to work with people.

Three other students work at the center besides Hobby and Wilhelm. Linda Cobb, a social science major and Tom Holbrook, a mechanical engineering major are both on work study, while senior child development major Sheila Rafiyan is conducting her internship at the center.

"I look for people with enthusiasm, flexibility and patience among other things. Anybody can work here if they have the qualifications," Jorgensen said.

The students each work several days during the week, teaching the clients basic skills and leading educational and recreational activities. They also lead discussions in subjects such as problem-solving and decision-making.

"The clients consider me a friend," said Hobby. "I visit with them and joke around with them. I'm there to teach them, but we do fun things. We (the staff) listen to them and try and steer them into society."

On Wednesday nights several staff members take the clients out into the community for different social events, from bowling to walking around downtown. All the events are designed to build self-confidence and encourage involvement in outside activities.

"Most of the clients can't take the initiative to go by themselves so we show them that it's fun and not that hard to do," Hobby said.

Jorgensen emphasized that the clients seem to enjoy it.

"They have friends within the group, and it is a form of social interaction that a lot of them wouldn't be getting if they weren't here," she said. "You can't make mental illness into black and white statements, but when you are talking about what other mentally ill people are possibly doing, many are isolated, alone in hotel rooms, or hidden by families of transients."

Jorgensen pointed out, however, that mental illness isn't a sickness that means those afflicted won't be able to function for the rest of their life.

"This is one form of therapy," she said. "It is based on maintenance and support. Medication is another basic type. Schizophrenia, for example, can be brought under control this way (by medication). Most of the time it is lifelong but I wouldn't say it's incurable."

Hobby emphasized that the hardest thing about her job is not knowing how long a client can or will stay at a high functioning level.

"It's hard to see them not get much better," she said. "You get to a point where everything is going great and then they come in and they're really depressed. I really care about them, and it's hard to see that."

Jorgensen agreed, adding that while some clients may go into remission and become unable to function very well without the aid of socialization, others may regress and need to be integrated all over again.

"We get our gratitude when they graduate and don't need us anymore," she said.

Wilhelm, who hopes his work-study experience will lead to a fulltime position as a horticultural therapist, added that another difficult aspect involved is the high amount of stress.

"You really begin to understand what chronic means," he said. "That is, not being in the mainstream. You have to be a role model on their level. It's not a real pleasant thing to deal with all the time, but you have to remember that what is going on is part of a job. If they are on a down trip and need a facet for release, you have to be there."

Hobby also added that while the students are good for the clients, the clients are good for the students.

"I take things a lot lighter now than I used to," she said. "Petty things don't bother me as much. It makes you realize how easy you have it. When you do badly on a test, it really makes you appreciate how unimportant that is compared to what they're dealing with. They are trying to cope with a kitchen and how to use it, and I'm bummed out about a stupid test."

Hobby also added that her work with the clients has made her realize how many different facets each person has.

Dance workshop to be held

Dancers of all ages are invited to take part in a Dance Workshop being held Saturday, March 5, in the Crandall Gym and adjacent Dance Studio.

Scheduled for all day, the event will include 90-minute sessions on such dances as aerobics, beginning and intermediate ballet, country dance, gymnastics, beginning and intermediate jazz, modern dance, social dance, tap dance, and yoga. Cost is $5.

It will begin with registration at 9 a.m. in the foyer of the gym building. Proceeds from the event will be used for various activity programs of the Cal Poly chapter of the California Association for Health, Physical Education, Recreation, and Dance, which is its sponsor.

A maestro of consistency bows out tonight

by Mike Mathison
Staff Writer

"Carolyn has been the most consistent player for us over the years...I can't say enough good things about her. She works hard, is intelligent on the floor and by far is the best all-around player we have."—women's basketball head coach Marilyn McNeil.

McNeil said this in October about her lone senior, Carolyn Crandall, a month and a half before the first game. But it couldn't have been closer to the truth.

Tonight at 7:30 in the Main Gym, Crandall will end her four-year Cal Poly basketball career when the Mustangs host the University of San Diego.

"Yeah, I'll be sad," Crandall admitted. "But I don't think it will hit me until next year. The spring quarter will still be the same this year: I'll go out and play (basketball) for fun. But next fall quarter some of my friends will be out practicing and I'll just be a regular college student. I'll have that two-hour block (normally used for practice) free and I won't have all the worries of basketball."

Crandall enters tonight's contest with four school records—most games played in a season (33 last year); most games played in a career (tonight makes 110); best field goal percentage for a season (.550 last year); and most rebounds in a career (565, her second rebound tonight will give her 100 more than the next person).

She is also the No. 2 all-time scorer with 965 points. Crandall needs 35 points tonight (which would be a career high) to hit the 1,000-point mark.

Not a bad career.

"The biggest key about Carolyn is that she has given us four years of honest participation," McNeil said. "She hasn't bitched and complained. She practices every day and is a competitor. I think she just really loves the game. She has been the captain for the last two years, and deservedly so."

"Last year I said I didn't see how we could replace Laura (Buehning), and we didn't. And this year I don't see how Carolyn can be replaced. We're losing more than just Carolyn. A lot of times people underestimated her as a player. She has come up big for us the last couple of weeks."

In her last four games, Crandall has been nothing short of superb. She hit for 82 points (40-of-70 from the floor, two-of-two from the line) for a 20.5 average, and Carolyn Crandall (left) even to the last gives 100 percent for her team. She ends her four-year college career tonight.

Mustang Daily—Tom Viskocil grabbed 25 rebounds. She has scored in double figures in 20 of the 27 contests to date.

Crandall has a 14.2 overall scoring average, and completed the CCAA at 16.2.

She has collected seven or more rebounds in 18 of the games, hitting double figures four times. Her top games have been 30 points versus Hawaii Pacific (15-of-20 shooting) and 13 rebounds against Wayland Baptist. Not a bad way to end a career.

Female kickers on road

Squeaky clean, if not dry.

That is the state the women's soccer team hopes to be in this weekend, traveling to Cal State Northridge this weekend to put its 5-0 Division I record on the line.

Northridge is 3-0-2.

The team has been on the road the last two weeks, beating UCLA, Cal State Long Beach and UC Santa Barbara.

Poly will return next weekend to host Cal State Long Beach Friday and San Diego State Saturday.

The Last Word:

Why then?

Reasoning is of a feminine nature: it can give only after it has received. Without information, the brain cannot function. In order to cope with the world, it must gather information and it must process it.

The same principle applies to judgment. However, any judgment of an individual, or a group of individuals, Iranian students for example, would be incomplete if their access to "inside" information is denied. Such information would be of great value to those seeking an optional perspective, one different than what has been provided by the media.

Verifiable information is available through these students, who are representative of a nation consolidated by its dynamic religion, Islam. This religion, so simple yet undefined and misunderstood by Westerners, simply means the submission to One God. The word "Moslem", which refers to a follower of this faith, comes from the Arabic word "salamah", meaning submission to the truth.

Even the faith itself was not first presented by Mohammad, the founder of Islam. Quran, the holy book of Moslems, makes it abundantly clear that Islam is the one and only faith revealed to mankind from the beginning.

Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jesus, Mohammad: they were all prophets who appeared at different times and places and were propagating the same faith. They were not founders of the faith to be named after them. They were just restating the faith of their predecessors.

Now, if we believe that we are all created equally upon the will of God from the same Adam and Eve, loved by the same creator, and sharing almost the same principles, then what is the nature of the misunderstandings that restrain our instinctive effort to replace hatred with love and care? And if the impulse to place blame on a people is as difficult to repress as the impossibility of not judging them on hearsay, is it not fair to at least gain the knowledge first and then look for an outlet?

Dump "Chuck"

Editor:

The Daily's editorials, columns, and letters have become increasingly literate and thought-provoking this year. This tendency has been reversed, however, with every appearance of a cartoon by "Chuck," who has managed to offend a broad spectrum of ethnic and political groups with drawings that are not only witless and poorly executed but ignorant and bigoted.

For example, Chuck portrayed Tom Hayden in the 60's as a flea-bitten long-haired hippie. Regardless of what one thinks of Hayden's politics, the fact is that even in the 60's he was noted for wearing short hair, a suit and tie. In any case, were the shaggy demonstrators against the Vietnam War more contemptible than the short-haired, properly dressed soldiers who obediently murdered women and children at My Lai? If it weren't for the guts shown by Hayden and others who faced jail and ostracism for refusing to be "good soldiers" in the 60's, Chuck and those current students who glibly boast of being "Real Americans" from the haven of a peacetime campus might be getting their heads blown off in Vietnam today.

Most recently, Chuck has attributed California's fiscal deficit to Jerry Brown's lavish spending. Just where did Brown waste money, Chuck? Certainly not on education; under his administration California, with the third highest per capita income in the country, sank to the bottom of all the states in per capita spending on public education, one consequence of which has been the recent budget cuts and fee increases at Poly. It so happens that the amount of the deficit Brown left corresponds closely to the amount lost from local and state revenues by Proposition 13 and subsequent tax-cutting initiatives.

A college newspaper should, to be sure, be open to varying ideological points of view, but it also has the responsibility of exercising some standard of intelligence, maturity, and taste. "Chuck" has none of these, and his infantile idea of satire is an embarrassment to Poly. I join with many others in urging you to replace him.

One more step away

Editor:

Being involved extensively with the ASI and seeing its current state of affairs compels me to address the issue regarding the eligibility of our ASI president.

In the Daily's Feb. 23 issue, Clary rationalized her failure to resign by stating that she was unaware of the provision which required her to take seven units while campaigning, and that the Senate's Operational Guidelines allowed for extenuating circumstances if a senator fell below a 2.0 GPA!

I say hogwash!!

Since when is ignorance of the law justification for its disregard and nonenforcement? Further, the Operational Guidelines apply only to senators, not executive officers. Corporate bylaws take precedence over any guidelines, not to speak of CSU regulations; both of which have strict GPA minimums and unit requirements, neither allowing exceptions.

I could understand allowances made for truly exceptional or close calls, but a 0.86 GPA, and the fact that it is not her first infraction, does not justify exceptions. If this blatant disregard of the bylaws is to be ignored, then it should never be enforced.

The Senate, by crying wolf, claiming malevolence on Kevin Moses' part, has only clouded the issue and helped them "rationalize" in their own minds their failure to enforce the bylaws. But when the cloud raises they'll still have to account for their action. An action legally unjustifiable.

The University, by condoning this issue, only takes Cal Poly's "learn-by-doing" theory one more step away from the "Real World." Thank God the Washington Post was not so passive.

Clarifying economic views

Editor:

I wish to take this opportunity to commend the staff of the Mustang Daily for its excellent coverage of the forum titled, "Reaganomics and the Budget Deficit: (What Went Wrong?)" held on Feb. 24.

However, may I point out that some of my remarks were misquoted, thus giving the wrong impression to your readers. The Mustang Daily's version of my remarks was: "Reagan's policy of deregulation was designed to reduce capital investment and increase productivity, and the plan to reduce government spending was designed to reduce the deficit and fight inflation. As a result, he said, the deficit grows to a new height, and revenues declined because the economy did not grow."

I did not say "deregulation was designed to reduce capital investment." Moreover, the statement itself is wrong. Furthermore, the conclusion attributed to me in the quoted paragraph above concerning the growth of the deficit is incorrect. Let me further clarify the matter. My task on the forum was to explain within just six minutes the following: 1) What was the state of the economy before Reagan's administration took charge? 2) What were Reagan's economic policies to cure the problem? and 3) What caused the federal budget to rise to new heights? In essence, here is what I presented during the forum:

When President Reagan's administration took over in January 1981, the U.S. economy was sluggish, with inflation and interest rates in double digits, productivity growth rates on the decline, and the federal deficit rising and approaching $60 billion.

To cure these, and other problems as well, the Reagan administration directed a three-prong attack:

- a) Deregulation: designed to foster more competition, and to lower cost of production and prices;
- b) A tax cut: designed to induce capital investment (in modern plants, machines and equipment), to raise productivity, and to accelerate GNP growth rates. It was anticipated that revenues from rising GNP would more than offset the deficit from cuts in taxes.
- c) Reduction in government spending: designed to reduce the deficit, inflation and the role played by government in economic activity.

When the Economic Recovery and Taxation Act was passed by Congress and signed by President Reagan, many optimistic remarks were made, including the following by Secretary of Treasury Donald Regan, "1982 and subsequent years will show vigorous, perhaps unprecedented economic growth."

Well here we are, and so far the results do not match the optimistic forecasts. The economy did not grow, the anticipated revenues didn't flow, and the deficit rose to new heights — projected to be $207.7 billion in fiscal year 1983.

Why didn't the tax cut induce sufficient capital investment by business? Why didn't it produce the anticipated revenues to relieve the budget deficit? Here are two explanations:

1. Fundamentally, the tax cut was not structured to insure that capital investment by business will actually take place. It was not clearly structured to be a reward for good behavior.

2. More significantly, the business and economic outlook was not very promising, due to the very restrictive policies of the Federal Reserve Board. In its effort to fight inflation and stamp out inflationary expectations, the Fed slowed the money supply for a period much longer than expected. Consequently, the economy was driven into a recession, resulting in high unemployment and lower consumer demand. In the process, it also resulted in higher interest rates. Consequently business was reluctant to invest.

The upshot of all this was to subject the Federal budget to a two-way squeeze: one, squeezing the government revenues; the other, forcing additional government spending. Government revenues declined because the discouraged businesses did not invest and the economy didn't grow. Also, high interest rates forced the government to spend more. It was estimated that every 1 percent rise in interest rates added $1 billion to payments to Social Security and military pension recipients, and approximately $4 billion to the cost of servicing the government debt.

But the Fed alone is not to blame for the rising deficit. Congress and the administration are also responsible. They did not succeed in balancing the budget because of the pressure exerted on elected officials by large numbers of special interest groups.

So many spending programs are perpetuated by politicians merely because there is a pressure group for these programs (e.g. senior citizens, farmers, defense industries, unions, business, education). There are nearly 1,700 political action committees in the U.S. The main function of a good portion of these is to get elected officials or political candidates to promise to spend more for their cause and their constituencies. They try to educate and persuade politicians to vote more for their particular interest group. Refusals are met with intimidations and terrorization, and many times they are voted out of office.

So what we have here is a political process which requires most political candidates to promise to provide more goods and services — far more than the economy can endure. The pressure groups more often than not prevent the elected officials from voting for rational tax and spending measures to strengthen the economy, in the interest of the American people and the nation as a whole.

I will greatly appreciate it if you would set the record straight.
